I'm trying to write a pop-culture fiction novel, and I'm having trouble coming up with the right term for a character who tries to sell you a plan for wealth and happiness that is actually just for wealth. If there is no word for this, could somebody suggest one? A: Scam artist might be a good fit for your book. Scam artist n (1870s) "a person who pretends to be an expert in a trade, or who exploits people by making false claims about his or her qualifications." A hypercrat would be someone who promises "unconditional" happiness. They're often sold as snake-oil merchants and called out by others as being unscrupulous. Consider megalomaniac having or showing excessive desire or ambition; or, striving for great power, influence, etc. and using these to dominate others; the dictator megalomaniac. "A megalomaniac despot of no special talent or charm but with ruthless ambition and a thirst for power." - Google If you can make it fit your character well, it's a good fit.
